Pondering in Our Heart

At the Jack P. Lewis Christian Studies Seminar last weekend, Dr. Harold Shank asked that we not only try to understand Isaiah (and, in fact, the rest of scripture), but that we seek out what Isaiah has to say to White Station right here and now. Dr. Shank showed that many things Isaiah said could take place at any time throughout history which means that we can participate in the hope described by the prophet. On the other hand, we may fall into the destruction he describes as well. So reading and understanding is crucial. We cannot understand what scripture says to us unless we understand what it said so long ago, but that does not make it any less critical to seek out what God says to us through scripture. Further, we must seek God on his own terms, meaning that what we find in scripture will cause us to change our thoughts, feelings, behavior, and even our very being. I hope this is what our study of both Isaiah in our classes and of Colossians in our sermons does to us. I hope God confronts us and changes us toward Him.

A Christian theologian named Dietrich Bonhoeffer who was imprisoned and executed by the Nazis during World War II wrote a letter to his brother-in-law on this very subject in the year 1936. What he says about the way he learned to read the Bible changed his life forever:

"First of all I will confess quite simply--I believe that the Bible alone is the answer to all our questions, and that we need only to ask repeatedly and a little humbly in order to receive this answer. One cannot simply read the Bible, like other books. One must be prepared really to enquire of it. Only thus will it reveal itself. Only if we expect from it the ultimate answer, shall we receive it. That is because in the Bible God speaks to us. And one cannot simply think about God in one's own strength, one has to enquire of Him. Only if we seek Him, will He answer us. Of course it is also possible to read the Bible like any other book, that is to say from the point of view of textual criticism, etc.; there is nothing to be said against that. Only that that is not the method which will reveal to us the heart of the Bible, but only the surface, just as we do not grasp the words of someone we love by taking them to bits, but by simply receiving them, so that for days they go on lingering in our minds, simply because they are the words of a person we love; and just as these words reveal more and more of the person who said them as we go on, like Mary, "pondering them in our heart," so it will be with the words of the Bible. Only if we will venture to enter into the words of the Bible, as though in them this God were speaking to us who loves us and does not will to leave us along with our questions, only so shall we learn to rejoice in the Bible..."

If it is I who determine where God is to be found, then I shall always find a God who corresponds to me in some way, who is obliging, who is connected with my own nature. But if God determines where He is to be found, then it will be in a place which is not immediately pleasing to my nature and which is not at all congenial to me. This place is the Cross of Christ. And whoever would find him must get to the foot of the Cross, as the Sermon on the Mount commands. This is not according to our nature at all, it is entirely contrary to it. But this is the message of the Bible, not only in the New but also in the Old Testament..."
